

INVESTMENT MARKET

Investment and speculation is gradually playing a large part in coin buying. This condition is frowned upon by numismatists in other countries and even by some of our own oldtimers.

Speculation is typically American and certainly not the only thing we do with which they disagree. The oldtimers are not adverse to taking a fancy profit on coins they purchased years ago. As a matter of fact, they insist on it as I well know.

Speculating in coins - or investing, if you prefer - involves the same risk as in the stock market. Don't get the idea that anything and everything you buy in the line of coins is going to make you a "fast buck." There are just as many opportunities to buy coins today that will show a fancy profit in a few years, as there were ten or twenty years ago. The only trouble is, you must figure out what they are. Your guess is probably just as good as the next one and usually better than the person or dealer trying to push something onto you as a sure-fire good investment.

This type of buying has certain disadvantages, sometimes causing a false value on various items. It also has definite advantages other than the profit involved, such as making a source of supply for future collectors.

If you are looking for advice, get it from someone with a real knowledge of the subject who is not just interested in selling you. Above all, remember there is a risk involved as in all investments. I believe Confucius say - "If you can't pay, don't play."

PROOF SETS

During the first nine months of 1956, Proof Sets advanced too rapidly in price. Due to high prices, many collectors decided to sell and the market was overloaded and prices declined. This excess has been absorbed and during the past thirty days, dealers buying prices have advanced. My overall buying price is up ten percent and I am anxious to buy nearly all sets in quantities.

I firmly believe that Proof Sets will steadily advance in price and will soon be selling for more than their peak in August of 1956.

Prices quoted here are effective only to June 1st, or as long as our present supply lasts.

PHYSICAL CULTURE COINS

The Romans knew they couldn't match the beauty in Greek coins, and being very conscious of the fact that they were some three-hundred years behind these experts in a system of circular coinage, the conquerors of the ancient world set about to make their coins outstandingly unique -- if only to prove to their subjects and enemies that they were supermen in the art of weight lifting.

Not for them the small, handsome pieces of the Greeks; for their loose change the Romans employed chunks of bronze weighing one Roman libra or pound, from which can be traced the English denomination of that name, and its symbol the pound, as well as the abbreviation LB.

These hefty coins highlighted the double-faced head of Janus, patron saint of our January, and on the reverse was the prow of a galley and the figure L, showing that it was equivalent to one ox. This coin was dubbed and "aes," and was supplemented by five smaller denominations. Despite the fact that the biceps and arm muscles of the softer members of the Roman empire hardened considerably with the enforced exercise, transporting all this weight became quite a nuisance and gradual reductions brought it down to an ounce by 89 B. C.

Although not showpieces by Greek standards, the Roman mints nevertheless produced many interesting coins down through the long procession of Caesars. Emperor Trajan portrays architecture on his Sestertia with a view of the original Forum, the famous debating place. Another interesting item is the 41 A.D. Aureus of Claudius. After Caligula was murdered, Claudius went post-haste to the Praetorian Camp for protection, and there was proclaimed emperor. This coin shows his welcome reception by these soldiers.

The Romans went overboard for coin portraiture, so much so that about 200 B.C. the mint officials started omitting the heads of gods and goddesses and started glorifying themselves and ancestors on their official government pieces. When rigor mortis was setting in on the Roman Republic, the warlords of the state came into their own and adopted the right to pay their troops with the coinage minted by themselves, and circulated as the coins of the Republic. --Clarence M. Fink

FERDINAND AND ISABELLE

(1474-1504)

GOLD DOUBLE DUCAT

Crowned bust of Ferdinand and Isabelle facing/Arms of Spain.
This coin is of particular interest to collectors of Americana as this queen helped finance Columbus on his expedition when he discovered America. Also she is the only monarch to have her portrait on a U. S. coin -- the Isabelle Quarter of 1893. We were fortunate in purchasing a very small lot of these historically interesting and rare coins and offer them at a very special price.

A TALE OF TWO CITIES

At the beginning of the present twentieth century, the Dominion of Canada issued a Four-Dollar-Bill which caused quite an uproar and a few red faces.

In designing this Note, it was decided to show a ship passing through the locks at Sault Ste. Marie. This artistic vignette was placed in the center of the Note between the busts of Queen Victoria and Edward. It was dated July 2nd, 1900.

While an artistic achievement, this Note had not been in circulation very long when patriotic Canadians throughout the Dominion were raising a loud and prolonged howl. The reason for this discord was that the very fine canal locks shown on the bill were at Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan and built by the United States.

Ultimately, the matter was brought up in Parliament where the Minister of Finance, the Honorable I. W. Courtney was given an ultimatum by irate fellow members. He was also given a "mauvais quart d'heure" by the Canadian papers.

So far as can be ascertained, pure inadvertence seems to have been responsible for the error and it was not too long before the offending issue was called in.

This incident was hushed up and kept from the general public as much as possible. To help cover up the faux pas, another Four-Dollar-Bill was issued dated Jan. 2nd, 1902. Similar in design but showing the Canadian locks at Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario.

Both Notes are scarce in choice condition. The 1900 issue more so than the corrected one. I would be interested in purchasing either of these as well as other Canadian currency in Very Fine or better condition.

On this bill appeared the lock at Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan. Loyal Canadians were not pleased.
